PREFACE

THE present work is the initial volume of the AMERICAN CATALOG series of the twentieth century, replacing in this octavo form the quarto series of the American Catalogue initiated by Frederick Leypoldt with the two volumes of 1876 and continued in the four successive volumes 1876-84, 1884-90, 1890-95, 1895-1900, under the editorship of the present writer. The change is made pursuant to the announcement in the last volume of that series, and for the reasons there given. The quarto form, originally adopted partly because that seemed necessary to justify the price necessitated by the large cost of the original work of 1876, was somewhat cumbrous and proved unsatisfactory to users, and the new series adopts the form now more generally used for library as well as for book trade cataloging.

The period of the present volume covers the five years from January 1, 1900, to January 1, 1905, including only those books of 1905 imprint which were actually published within 1904. The former practice of breaking the period in the middle of the year, while in some respects convenient, had its disadvantages, and it does not conform conveniently with the cumulative system utilized in the present volume. It seemed preferable to make the five-yearly period comprehensive of the five years 1900, 01, 02, 03, 04, and to include books bearing the advance imprint of 1905, as above indicated, leaving to the next period books published in 1905, 06, 07, 08, 09, including those bearing the advance imprint of 1910. The present single alphabet, in 1212 pages, covers approximately 42,000 books and 100,000 entries—a substantial increase over the 27,500 of 1895-1900, the 25,000 of 1890-95, the 28,000 of 1884-90, a six-year period, and the 30 000 of 1876-84, an eight-year period. These figures illustrate the constantly increasing ratio of American book publication. The present catalog embraces reprints, importations in editions and the law reports of United States and State courts, but it does not attempt to include local directories, periodicals, musical scores, books chiefly blank, unbound maps, tracts and other low-priced pamphlets. Nor does it now cover Government and State publications and publications of societies and institutions (except those publishing through the book trade), for the most part now covered by special bibliographies.

The material of this volume is directly that of the Publishers' Weekly monthly and cumulated Reference Lists as preserved by the linotype system, edited into a consistent alphabet and filled out with additional titles not duly recorded in the year of publication. Its typographical scheme embraces: author entries, designated by Clarendon full-face type, which type is used also for the first word of anonymous books; title entries in Roman lower case; subject entries, designated by SMALL CAPS; and series entries, designated by italics. Thus the advantages of the dictionary catalog, or one-place method, are combined with the advantages of separate alphabets of each class of entry. While the subject entries are thus included in the general alphabet, in place of the second alphabet of the old system, the arrangement of subject entries is as in the previous system, by specific subjects, not by general classes. Each book is placed under the particular subject of which it treats, and entries under general headings are confined to books of a general rather than of a specific character. As the endeavor has been not to repeat entries, cognate subjects should be looked up in searching for books on a given subject, in which the Index to Subject Headings issued by the American Library Association will be found a useful help. As far as practicable the indications given by words in the title of a book have been followed in the assignment to subject headings.

The Directory of Publishers, whose books have been recorded in the present volume, includes 3876 names as against 1666 names in the 1895-1900 volume and 1649 names in the 1890-95 volume. It remains true that nine-tenths of American publishing is done by less than one-tenth of this number. The imprint is the name of publisher given on the title-page of the book, changes of firm name or of publisher being indicated, as far as we could obtain the information, in the list of publishers. Of course, many entries of publishers indicate merely printers or designate authors printing their own books only. It is to be regretted that American publishers are still behindhand in co-operating in the making of bibliographies which are, from the commercial side, chiefly for their own benefit, and that it is yet difficult to extract prompt and adequate information from them.

The original Weekly Record of the Publishers' Weekly system, with the descriptive note has also been preserved in linotype slugs, and it is purposed, should the commercial support of such a supplementary volume as indicated by advance subscriptions justify the enterprise, to complement this volume with a second volume including this full-title original record, arranged in yearly alphabets for 1900, 01, 02, 03, 04. To the full information given in these full-title entries and descriptive notes the present volume would be an index, but it should be added that this volume, as previously indicated, includes entries of a number of books which were not recorded in their year of publication and therefore would not be found in the supplementary volume.

It is a serious question how the increasing cost of American bibliography, in view of the increase each year in the number of publications, can be commercially covered, and it is not impossible that private publications of this nature will ultimately resign the field to a national bibliography published from the National Library, under an administration of that library such as that of Mr. Herbert Putnam, which recognizes fully its relations as the bibliographical center of the country. In that event unofficial bibliography is likely to be confined to the selective presentation of titles and supplementary information as demanded from week to week and from year to year, within the commercial support offered by libraries and the book trade.
